Commencement

Classes over, out from cover
Come the studes a-running;
In full clover, every lover
Maid must win with cunning.

Pockets raided, unupbraided,
Fritter we along;
Still unjaded, all unaided,
Dance and Play and Song.

Hops and germans, worse than Sherman's
Progress to the sea;
Spieling-Hermann's foolish sermons
To infinity.

Girls uncounted, bills high-mounted,
Buggies in demand;
Proudly flaunted, still undaunted,
Not a maid unmanned.

Sewanee of To-day

SEWANEE is progressing; Progress, in the face of the most appalling obstacles, has been the key-note of the University's attitude throughout the year now drawing to its close. The monuments of sacrifice have seemed more hallowed, and the mile-stones of an aggressive upward struggle add further to the splendour of the past.

The sad death of Dr. B. Lawton Wiggins left the University bereft of an executive head in the midst of the Commencement disorder. Dr. William B. Hall's immediate election as Acting Vice-Chancellor partially restored the University to the normal. Dr. Hall finally accepted the Vice-Chancellorship offered to him by the Executive Committee last fall. The Chair of English, made vacant by the sudden death of Dr. John Bell Henneman on Thanksgiving Day nineteen eight, and filled until Commencement by kind volunteers, was taken in charge at the opening of the new year by Dr. John MacLaren McBryde, Jr., and has prospered under him. Also, as Editor of the Sewanee Review, Dr. McBryde has recorded a year of continued success. The Chair of Greek, rendered vacant by Professor H. W. Jervey's resignation, has been occupied by Dr. Walter Hullihen, and shows no failure to maintain its share of Sewanee's classical reputation.

The use of Thompson Hall, formerly the stronghold of the Medical Department, has filled for the University the long-felt need of adequate space for chemical and physical laboratories. The greatest obstacle to the maintenance of a high-class scientific school has been done away with.

That the work of the University is being more generally recognized and more generously rewarded is everywhere evident. In addition to many small but valued gifts, the year has brought three magnificent additions to the University's resources. The fund raised by Mr. C. A. Coffin, of New York City, and totalling one hundred thousand dollars, has been paid in. This, in turn, fulfills the conditions of Mr. Andrew Carnegie's donation; and the additional sum of sixty thousand dollars is thereby assured. Following close upon so great benefactions came the gift of fifty thousand dollars from Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan. The story of these contributions to Sewanee's resources is full of meaning; meaning that throbs with the pulse of growing power for good, increasing ability to spread in an ever-widening circle the influence of a great and thus rapidly growing University. These splendid sums, constituting the University's Endowment Fund, assure the future beyond the realm of dreams.

All Saints' Chapel, begun so auspiciously in nineteen and five, began to accumulate its traditions in the great semi-centennial festival of nineteen and seven. The present year finds it still far from finished, but nevertheless the center of University life. Its temporary features will yield to the improvements of time; and meanwhile it marks another great forward stride. Saint Augustine's Chapel, the hallowed sanctuary of the spirit of the past, must pass from its long-held place; but with the regrets that inevitably accompany its passing come trooping the joys and profits of progress.

The Hodgson Memorial Infirmary, formerly a mere adjunct of the Medical Department, has arisen from the abolition of that Department a separate institution. Its equipment has been largely increased, and brought in every respect up to the standard of modern efficiency. Comforts hitherto sadly lacking have been provided, and every arrangement perfected for the care of charges. The staff of physicians is an able one; and a corps of efficient trained nurses is maintained the year round. The erection of the new water tank, and many improvements in the machinery for obtaining an adequate water-supply, have added beyond measure to the comforts of living in Sewanee, while the advancement of the cause of sanitation has won universal approval.

The recitation rooms of the Academy have been removed from about the Chapel, and set up on the Academy's own campus. This has marked a tremendous step for the clearing up of the old unsightly block, and has, besides, added to the efficiency of the lower school. Nor must the Civic League be omitted in this connection; for it is due in large part to the untiring efforts of that organization that so much has been done to beautify the campus and to prevent the litter the marring effect of which is cumulative.

The shrine of Terpsichore, and the abiding-place on earth of Demosthenes, old Forensic Hall, also passes with this year. Almost as prominent in tradition as St. Augustine's, revered by many a scape-grace student who went regularly to sleep in chapel, the old building must yield to the everywhere insistent compulsion of progress. But the new Forensic, more conveniently located, and adapted in a more modern fashion to its purpose, will soon develop traditions of its own.

Last upon the list of new buildings, there is the new fraternity house still in process of construction. The plans were drawn in harmony with the general scheme of the University; and the new building adds to the long array of handsome edifices.

To turn to a brief consideration of Sewanee's relations with the college world, the great feature that demands attention is the stand taken by Sewanee in Southern athletics. Concluding the season with a decisive victory over her greatest rival, Sewanee stood, for the first time in ten years, absolutely supreme in Southern football; and as Champion of the Southern Intercollegiate Athletic Association the University stands to-day, proud of her laurels, upheld by the enthusiasm of her loyal sons.

The good stand taken by Sewanee men in Intercollegiate debating has been maintained this year; and, to argue from the past, it is safe to assume that the University's relations with other institutions, in the peaceable contests on the rostrum, will evidence a growing importance.

Lastly, the two organizations in the University which boast amusement as the prime object of their existence, the Dramatic Club and the Glee Club, have both enlarged the scope of their activity, and both have made for this past year an enviable record. And, above all, the change of Term has recorded the highest standard of scholarship in Sewanee's history.

The Chancellor

WHEN the present beloved Chancellor was Chaplain, he was elected to a bishopric and declined, preferring to remain at Sewanee. The students, led by one of their number who is now the Rector of the largest church in America, pulled him in his carriage from the station to his home. Thus did the students regard Bishop Gailor when he had been at Sewanee only a few years. Now his period of service to the University has passed its twenty-fifth year, and his popularity is still growing.

Although his episcopal duties prevent his presence at Sewanee during much of the year, his influence is always felt. His visits are looked forward to with eagerness, and remembered with pleasure.

Bishop Gailor was not known to the University as a student. But in every other phase of her life he has shared her sufferings, borne her burdens; and the Chancellorship is a most fitting culmination of his long career of devoted service.

Vice Chancellor Hall

WHEN Dr. Hall accepted the Vice-Chancellorship permanently, he came direct to Sewanee; and the demonstration, given him on his arrival by the students and Sewanee in general, showed the Mountain's complete approval of the Executive Committee's choice. It is doubtful if there has ever been a more popular man connected with the University than Dr. Hall. He has been known to Sewanee as student, professor, dean and summer visitor, and now he has reached the highest office which the University can bestow upon a layman.

"Dr. Billie" is a scholar and a man of affairs, that combination which is so essential to the head of a great institution. He makes friends wherever he goes; there is none of that aloofness about him which could keep the students away from his support. He is the best friend the students have, ready to counsel when consulted, ready to use a firm hand when it is necessary.

It has been a year since Dr. Hall assumed his present duties, and during that time there has not been the slightest faltering in University affairs. The University has taken long strides in advance, and the promise of the future under his leadership is radiant.

The Hare and the Tortoise

WE students and grads of Sewanee, perfectly satisfied in the knowledge of what our Alma Mater is to us, take not the slightest interest in arguments about the future of "small universities." There may, however, be somewhat of interest in the life at a great Eastern city University, as seen by a Sewanee man.

In the heart of the endless maze of brick and mortar, with its million inhabitants, one comes suddenly upon a huge triangle of fine dormitory buildings. It was evening when I first saw the "dorms," and, as I passed through the entrance archway and was greeted by a flood of light from the rooms of nearly a thousand students, I thought—"What a feeling of power and of assurance for the future must bless every son of such a university, as he looks up and down this solid quarter-mile of dormitories, these whole streets of laboratories, lecture-halls and libraries. What wonders must college spirit accomplish here, where there are five thousand odd, students and instructors, in the total enrollment. Why, just to house them would require fifty halls the size of Hoffman! And, if these men were to hold a mass-meeting at Forensic, the overflow would reach the station and Mr. Andrews would have to address the far end of the crowd."

A few weeks later, I had an opportunity to see a football mass-meeting of this University. It had been announced in the University and city newspapers, and had been put at five o'clock so that no one might have conflicting lectures and so be prevented from attending. Yet, there was a smaller number of men present than at a mass-meeting in Sewanee!

The next jolt came when I found that a street-car conductor, on a line in another part of the city, did not know where the University is located.

After that little surprise, I often asked conductors, in many parts of the city, for the way to the University, simply to find out how well-known the great institution is. I found three more like the first! Not only is it the less cultured ones who take little interest, but many thousands of the wealthy and influential people of the city prefer to send their sons to small colleges. The life of the great city is like a sea, and the University is a mere tiny island, forever submerged beneath the roaring tides. Already the great Universities of New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Baltimore have fled for their lives from the heart of the cities in which they are placed; and now Harvard, situated in a city of only an hundred thousand, is looking about for means of escape into the country. Surely, the wisdom of our Founders is being justified.

Unwieldy with its great numbers, the student-body of the great University would be hopelessly divided, even were it built elsewhere. The impossibility of welding together men of so varied sorts and conditions, the busy social life of the huge city, the theaters, the restaurants and rendezvous, the long distances, all conspire to break up the intimacy of college life. When one has seen how inevitably this happens in the city Universities, he will take off his hat to the different men of different talents who keep so many varied activities alive in the small University. The men of the great institutions, divided into small groups, accomplish very much—far more than the smaller school can do—but the college spirit is missing. The larger the city, the more are all men strangers, and the greater is distrust, or, at least, complete indifference.

For the one man among an hundred students who wishes to become a scholar, for the man who aims toward Medicine, for the last year of Law and Engineering study, the advantages of the great city are necessary. But that is all.

Sewanee is probably the only University in America which controls completely its entire neighborhood. That is one of the many reasons why it is the best college in the country. But we believe that it is to-day, and through the future will more and more expand to be, something more than that. With our history of service to state and nation, with our present constituency of friends, officers, and six thousand devoted sons, each year more effectively organized, with all the unique advantages that are blended together in Sewanee, there is every reason to hope for, and to believe in and work toward, the day when our schools of engineering, architecture, law, theology and business training shall be, like our College of Arts to-day, equal to the schools of the greatest Universities in this country and abroad.

Theological

Ching, ching, ching!
Chow, chow, chow!
Chinese hash!
Bow, wow, wow!
St. Luke's!

THE yell breaks out upon the still night with something of a jar. It is the bunch hitting the grit up "Jacob's Ladder" to the ivy-mantled tower of St. Luke's. Once more that unearthly yell. What did you say? No, they're not Hell-Cats (that's the prerogative of those people over at Miss Johnnie's yonder, Teacup Inn). They're Theologues; at least, that's the popular name for them. Some are only postulants.

How many did you say? About twenty-one and a half, counting Mabry. You see, he's rather precocious; for while he is only a postulant, he boasts the rotundity of a bishop.

William Porcher DuBose, Dean Emeritus.

Department

You can see them now as they pass us. If they keep up that outdoor rough-house, they'll hear something to their advantage from the "Abbess."

Who's that? Why, our Matron, Miss Hall.

I knew it. The south-end window goes up, and the "Abbess" looks out on this embryo riot. No need of words. "The ass knoweth his crib," and so doth the Theologue. The socialists subside.

The stern countenance of the mother-superior from the open window made my blood run cold. Let us enter and make reparation. Kindness and cordiality soon drive away all disdain for our boisterous hilarity, and her hospitable spirit is soon rekindled. The "Professor of Brushwood and Bugs," a veritable pro-toplast of culture, stands beside the mahogany baby-grand and fills the air with sweet, clear sections of the classics, or burbles forth in animated strains of grand opera, while the other member of the Senior Class, topped with an artistic unshorn shock of locks, sits peacefully upon his revolving perch and pushes the blacks and whites in soft accompaniment. But our hour is spent, and reluctantly we must depart, leaving the "Abbess" contented with her knitting, and the jocular chair-man of the Sons of Rest indolently relaxed in the spacious Morris before the flickering fire.

Up the dimly lighted monastic stair-way, within an archive-walled study, we find a handsome ascetic with his nose stuck between the leaves of an antique mildewed volume. His self-indulgent room-mate sits idly before the fire and puffs furiously upon a corn-cob pipe in the production of an odoriferous aroma not altogether delightful. No place for a visitor, this. Here, this racket next door seems to promise revelry and amusement at large. And what an assortment, all trying to talk at once! A medley, led by an abbreviated mass of forensic gray-matter, accompanied by a resonant Irish bass with sonorous Philadelphia gibberish interspersed, interrupted by pathetic wails from the love-sick swain, and timidly attended by the bashful auburn-haired big one. Oh, if their Quaker forefathers could but hear them. Surely, they are rough-house sons of Erin, transplanted to Greater Camden, celebrating the seventeenth of March two months late.

Suppose we butt into the first entry. Here upon the first roost we discover too blissful postulant birds. Logically, one of them ought to be a parrot, as he hails from Mexico; but he has evidently communicated all his loquaciousness to his room-mate. Our Mexican Señor is known for his winning smile and brilliant learning; incidentally, he runs an anti-quarian exhibit. His room-mate is considered somewhat of a curiosity—"sed requiescant illi sub rosa."

In the second entry we find ensconced the man from Missouri, who alone calls for attention in this flat. He is a bachelor (as befits the inmate of a monastery), wisely preferring single blessedness to a room-mate. But he is busy in his indoor garden, digging up the Hebrew roots, and we can not stay.

In entry three we prepare to make an assault upon the first landing, but are deterred by the ghost of Cerberus. We have no "sop" to give the brute, and besides, we don't care to see Pluto; so we try the door opposite. Here we find Pluto and his wife calling upon Hermes. Cerberus blocks our retreat, so we decide to stay. But we find we are mistaken in him; he does too much tail-wagging. His master, too, proves less savage than his provisional cognomen would imply. The cast of his physiognomy suggests the Anglo-Saxon, "for he is an Englishman" (cf. Pinafore, chorus 4, lines 11, ff). Pluto's consort turns out to be the portly and affable postulant who relieves the organist at the agony-box occasionally.

We escape while Cerberus dozes, and climb through the window of the upper story to reach the last entry. Pandemonium reigns in the upper deck. The quartette is practicing; but only the tenor and baritone belong to us. Charming couple in quartette—can't sing without interrupting the melody with their protestations of mutual affection.

We pull out while the airs and feathers begin to fly again. We would like to call on "Dr. Sidebottom" and his better half, but fear of the quartette drives us on. Down stairs is the meeting-place of the Homiletic Society. There isn't anything in the way of Dogma too abstruse for their ignorance. They have already decided a number of doctrinal points that have puzzled orthodox churchmen since the Nicene Council. The one thing they lack is an organ to publish their dissertations. They're going on now. Heavens, what a racket! Hush, there's the quartette again. Who says St. Luke's is not the center of University life?

The Law Department

AS the blessings of life take their flight, their beneficent worth, at first accepted as a mere matter of course, becomes more and more patent to those that are soon to be deprived of it forever. And thus it is with the Law Department. The deep truth and significance of this statement can be realized to its fullest extent only by that surviving few who can recall the days when Captain McNeal, from his sanctum of the third floor of Walsh, presided in legal majesty over the annual offerings of the Academic Department.

The reader only superficially acquainted with the relative merits of the two institutions may think it strange that we use the word "offerings" in this connection. Let us assure such a one, however, that there was a time, in remote antiquity to be sure, when many a hopeful Academ, influenced perhaps by the gently insinuating remarks of the Professor of Latin, shortly after Spring Finals, forsook the calling of a liberal education and turned his attention to the Common Law. At first the Academs looked askance on this annual decimation of their ranks; but soon they found themselves injured to the spectacle, and, in that highly superior way that only an Academ can compass, they comforted themselves with the philosophical reflection that even the best of gardens requires constant weeding.

Despite, however, this haughty attitude of the Academs toward all things not Academic, and the no less scornful indifference of the downy-lipped Theologues, there are few who deny, in this last year of its incumbency, that the Law Department has been not only a highly valuable asset, but indeed almost a necessity to the existence of the University. How many famous alumni has it turned out! How many knotty problems of S. I. A. A. legislation has it not solved! How many a student, a physical wreck from overwork, has it not sheltered from ignominy and disgrace within the protecting circle of its enfolding arms! None can tell.

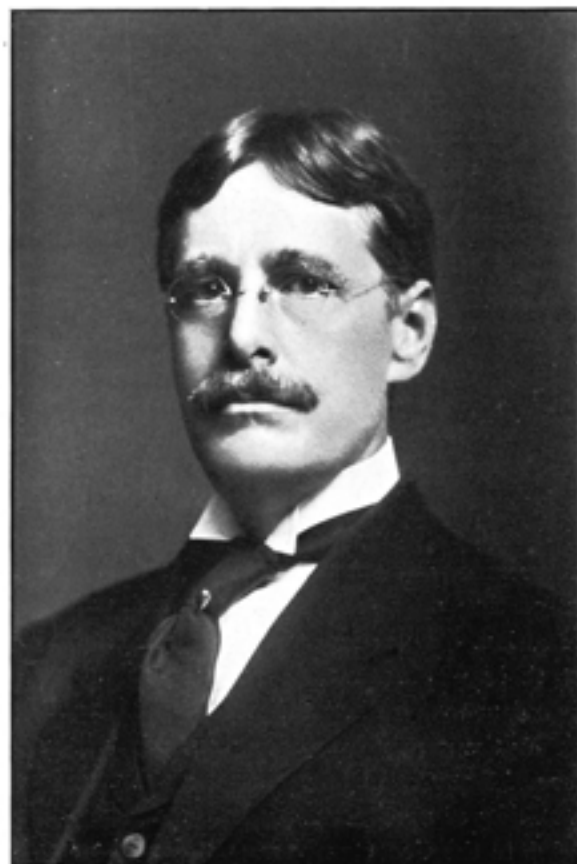

Certain it is, however, at least from an athletic standpoint, that the place left vacant by the abolition of the Law Department will prove a sore gap in the very citadel of student life; for is not the Law Department the very corner-stone upon which has been reared the superstructure of Sewanee's fame in intercollegiate sport? None can deny it, and though there still remain a few so antiquated as to affirm that a law school should teach primarily Law, and not football, they are happily coming by gradual stages to realize the error of their judgment.

Yet this awakening on the part of the Powers That Be has come too late to save the Department. It is hard to convince a clergyman that he has made a mistake, and it is utterly impossible in the case of a bishop. Realizing this, we can not condemn the action of the Board of Trustees in this matter.

But to the credit of the present Dean be it said, that coming to Sewanee under the most unfavorable conditions, he has wrought wonders in the School of Law. Given a fair chance, he would, we are confident, have built up a department that larger and more thoroughly equipped Universities might well envy; and though his labors by arbitrary legislation are brought to naught, yet their influence will, we are sure, live on when the institution of which he is now the head will have become a mere memory.

But the time is ripe for sackcloth and ashes. Let us not be misunderstood when we proclaim that the Law Department of the University is a martyr to the cause of Learning.

Lyman Chalkley, Dean.

Medical Department

"Time through Jove's judgments just Huge alteration brings;
They are but fools who trust
In transitory things."

AS the things of to-day become the things of yesterday, and yesterday in turn gives place to yesteryear, History and Legend step in to weave about the persons and institutions that have passed that subtle indefinable glamour "of other days." And so it is with the Medical Department. There are yet a few of the older inhabitants who can recall the time when mustaches and side burns were still fashionable; when from the mysterious upper floor of Thompson came the strangely subdued rasp of a saw, flesh imbedded, mingled with some merry whistled melody as the young M.D. bent over the dissecting table. But the land of the Pharaohs no longer sends her sons to Sewanee; no longer mysterious barrels, tightly hooped and headed, are set down upon the station platform to await the coming of the drayman, and white-sheeted ghosts with chain and coffin no longer parade in torch-light array down the Avenue o' nights. For all these things have passed with the passing of the old régime. To-day the curious Academ that by chance finds his way into that deserted laboratory pauses to speculate upon what manner of men lived and worked among that vast array of empty test-tubes and retorts.

The individuals that composed the Medical Department were men. Who that remembers the numerous gray heads they numbered can deny the fact? Who that recalls the cubic capacity of a Gaither or a Gillespie will try? And on Commencement Day who will now reënforce the other Departments, swelling their numbers, and, arrayed in blood-red tassels and gaudy vests, outshine the Bishops by reason of their splendour? Surely Sewanee has lost much of her local colour: the types that made her bizarre and unique have departed, and to-day we fear she is much like other Universities.

Again, was it not the Meds that kept the curiosity of Sewanee at its normal pitch? In the old days the appearance of a stranger scarcely ruffled the surface of the pond of Sewanee's residential life, for to the matron of the Mountain, by dint of long usage, there were but two categories under which a man could fall,—her friends and acquaintances, and—the Meds. Who will deny that this in itself, merely from a salutary standpoint, was enough to justify the existence of an even more remarkable institution than the School of Medicine?

Some there were so short-sighted as to declare that the abolishment of the Medical Department was a good thing, saying that, so situated and so equipped, it could not hope to compete with the larger institutions; but the vast majority, realizing that there is more in life than the mere mastery of technicalities, could confidently sit back and defy the larger institutions to compete with Sewanee. What if the death-rate among the patients of our graduates in Medicine was two- or even three-fold that of other doctors, would not the "savoir faire" and polish of the practitioner, acquired during his stay on the Mountain, more than compensate society's loss? There are but few who can not realize the justice of this claim.

But the opinion of the majority has been overridden, and the Medical Department is no more. Handicapped, Sewanee must still continue the fight that has placed her, and will keep her, in the van of Southern Colleges.

John Savely Cain, Dean.

College of Arts and Sciences

IT is with fear and trembling that we take our pen in hand to extol the manifold virtues and many-sided activities of the Academic Department. For where is there a penman so rash as to suppose that, with all his skill and ingenuity, he could even half succeed in so colossal an undertaking? The underlying principles that govern the Universe are beyond analysis and above praise, and so it is with this, the corner-stone of the University, the College of Arts and Sciences.

And with the Academics themselves, this fact, that by now has become a matter of tradition, together with their inbred sense of responsibility and importance, is the all-dominating factor in their college existence. To the Academic his mortar-board with its black tassel, his sable robe with its sable button—a uniform too sober perhaps to be entirely consistent—is a more proud apparel than ever decked an emperor's body-guard.

The people familiar with the life and workings of the University, the Academic will argue, will readily understand this pride of race; for do they not know that, shorn of the Department of which he is a member, the name "Sewanee" would become merely a term of hollow resonance? Do they not realize that, were the College of Arts and Sciences abolished, not only the University, but the entire solar system would undergo a whole series of cataclysmic readjustments?

And being profoundly convinced of the importance of his Department, and of himself as an integral part thereof, the Academic gathers therefrom a certain bearing of superiority. It is not unusual to find in him a temerity that persists in proclaiming his own excellencies in the face of the incredulous Theologian, or the over-studious members of the Law Department; and woe to the Freshman, who, during his period of "ratey," fails to become imbued with the proper spirit!

To such a degree is this idea of partisanship and loyalty carried that its beneficent influence is showered upon all alike. For where is there a man in the whole University who will not declare that the great Dogma of the Middle Ages is exploded—that no longer the Pope, but the Dean of the College alone is infallible?

Nor is this magnificent loyalty and pride built upon a purely transcendental basis, but it is the natural outgrowth of great things accomplished. Has not every Academ been tried in the fire of Latin I?

To the members of the other Departments the full-fledged Academ is a person to be held in esteem, if not in awe as a being of superior mentality and vaster potentialities. And, strange to say, the Academ does not resent this attitude. The Law School may produce proportionately the greater number of athletes; St. Luke's may be the habitat of embryo bishops; but Hoffman still maintains that brain is greater than brawn and mightier than gaudy apparel, and that while the Academ sometimes succeeds in uniting these virtues, neither the Lawyer nor the Theologue has ever brought about so ideal a consummation.

And so let every one that holds the interests of Sewanee dear join in reciting the praises of the Department that, composed of the younger men, still persists in flourishing in spite of the condescending toleration of the Theologues, already on the shady side of life; in spite of the annual legislation of the Schedule Committee; and in spite of the Winter Term; the Department that is, and ever will be, the mainstay of the University.

St. George Leakin Sioussat, Dean.

Quintard Memorial Hall.

The Sewanee Military Academy

WERE we called upon to trace the history of the Military Academy from its inception, we would accept the task with pleasure.

Be not astounded, dear Reader, at such an egotistic assertion; it is necessary only to remind you that the Sewanee Military Academy has not yet completed the second year of its existence.

Wipe away your tears, though the thought that the Grammar School has ceased to be fills your heart with grief. For such grief is uncalled for, even if you are tempted, and sorely, to give way to your feelings because the name you loved has been changed. Some of us are not so successful in changing a name we love, no matter how great our personal charm may be. Again we say, wipe away your tears; for the great past which rises like an impregnable fortress behind the name of Sewanee Grammar School has been transferred, by the mighty voting power of the Board of "Bustees," to bulwark the more academic name, Sewanee Military Academy. Such a bold dash, and well-executed maneuver! We can not recall in all history such an one as this. Still, even the powerful and explosive oratory carried about by our honored Trustees can not destroy with a single blow the traditions and memories which hover and cling about the oldest and therefore most honored institution on the Mountain.

From General Gorgas down to the present strong Headmaster, progress has marked the life of the Academy. Step by step she has extended her campaign until now she is on an equal footing with any other College Preparatory School in the South; and is ready at any time to take under her wing any ambitious young man accompanied by the necessary gold dust. And how those boys do scatter the dust! As a result, the Supply Store (otherwise entitled Edgar Freeman Strong, Headmaster.

"Cadets' Heaven") has installed a new liquid dispenser.

And now there is another change which we must note, and that is the removal of the lecture rooms from the Chapel Square to the Academy's own Campus. What a joy and relief to the "rat"! The long tramp from the dormitory, laden with the books of his "superiors" as well as his own, no longer oppresses him. The dusty road no longer feels the measured tread of his unwilling feet. For all this the young soldier is grateful.

Let us change the subject, for we can not allow such an opportunity as this to slip by. We would first draw your attention to the prowess of the Tiger Cubs on the athletic field. We need not mention their intellectual attainments, lest we do them an injustice. But as athletes they are as skilled and daring as Joe Purvis ever was. Many and great victories are entangled in their claws; and no one can ever learn the art of celebrating quite as well as the young Tiger.

Now for a glimpse at the life (save the mark) within the battlements. Quintard Hall is the scene of nearly all social functions—and they are many—which come within the sphere of the Cadet. But most notable is it for the time-honored "rough-house" which teaches the young man to control his temper like a veteran, and to throw a bucket of water with alarming accuracy. And moreover, we must not overlook, no matter how brief our sketch may be, the ventures of the Academy youth into the realm of Dan Cupid. Many a time doth the University lover, outwardly so dignified, shiver when he thinketh anent his young rival "sleeping, sweetly sleeping" within Quintard's guarded halls; and then longeth he for the day when, in some succeeding generation of the genus Freshman, that same his rival shall lie defenceless in the dead of night. "O Sleep, you ape of death," what opportunities you offer for the discomfiture of the "rat!"

And now, let us proceed to the parade ground, where the recruit must learn the technicalities of gun-handling, and the stride prescribed by the manual. The orders come thick and fast, as the awkward squad is being initiated into military mysteries.

"Halt." "Guide right." "Front." "Hey, you pigeon-toed rooky," bawls out the commander, "your feet will stay asleep if you keep 'em turned in that way."

The recruit answers not a word; he takes it out in thinking. The commander looks the aggregation over, and swears he never saw a more dilapidated bunch of would-be soldiers in his life. Then, when ranks are broken and the "raw" recruits have filed away to the armory, the commander saunters casually into the Headmaster's office, and swears that this year's crop is the most promising material he has yet drilled. And so it goes.

From daybreak to taps there is always a plethora to be done. Breakfast, which would satisfy the most exacting epicure, is followed by prayer—a most logical sequence. Then classes come in rapid succession, to be finally terminated by the bugle-call for dinner, the most joyful blast the young musician can afford his anxious comrades. Drill, and sometimes study, fill the afternoon for some; but many steal away to view the sunset "with a friend." And once again the "man higher up" wonders whom she had that "date" with.

"Rest comes at length" to a tired body, and the buoyant young soul slips off to dreamland. So may your sleep, and your dreams too, be peaceful.

Sewanee's Painter

IN the Memorial Hall, at the Centennial Exposition, in 1876, a large canvas on one of the walls at the American Section attracted more than ordinary attention. It was entitled in the catalogue, "The Shadow of a Rock," but words painted in text letters, upon the immense gilt frame, disclosed the meaning of the painting. "A man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."—Isaiah xxxii, 2. Other texts painted upon the frame ("And that Rock was Christ," and "So run that ye may obtain") served to deepen the interest taken in the picture, and to further explain its spiritual significance. Inquiries developed the fact that the painter was a Bavarian by birth, and had studied art in Nuremberg and Munich, where he had worked as an engraver and had thus acquired his mastery of the art of lettering, as exhibited in the decoration of the frame of the above picture; that he was then in his fifty-fourth year and was living in Lenoir, N. C., where he had not only a studio, but a parish: for he had come to America in 1848 and had studios successively in New Jersey, New York and Rhode Island, where he had consecrated his art to Christ and the Church, and had but a few years previously taken Orders in the Church. And it was further learned that he was the painter of the original of a very familiar picture, "Rock of Ages," which had suffered in popular appreciation by being chromoed and lithographed and distributed far and wide by every known process of art reproduction; and that he was also a wood carver and a master of the science of symbolism, so that most of his work is of the nature of teaching by parables, not to say imbued with mysticism.

But what has occasioned this notice of Dr. Oertel in the Cap and Gown is his generosity towards the University of the South. His first gift was "The Shadow of a Rock" in 1879. For many years it occupied one of the walls of Saint Luke's Hall, and its influence upon the minds of some of the students who have gone forth from our Theological Department has been gratefully acknowledged by many of them. For several years in the 80's Dr.

Oertel resided in Sewanee, and the house on Morgan's Steep was built for him, the high-ceilinged room being his studio.

The artist removed thence to St. Louis, and finally to Vienna, Va., and continued his work until his death last December at the age of eighty-six. In these later years he gave to the University the wonderful series of large paintings, intended to represent God's plan of redemption, now upon the walls of Sigma Epsilon Hall, and the wonderfully strong picture of "Jesus or Barabbas" (which is a parable; probably the more readily comprehended by the average student of sacred things than the others), and the smaller pictures (temporarily let us hope) on the walls of the Registrar's office. His latest gift was the series of Christ and the Twelve Apostles (now in the Library), intended as an Altar piece for one of the Chapels in Sewanee. When these great works of Dr. Oertel shall be appropriately placed so they can be viewed as they were intended to be viewed by those who will seek in them the deep religious truths that were intended to be taught therein as by parables, the place of the Rev. Johannes A. Oertel, D.D., among the "never-failing succession of benefactors" of the University will be fully assured.

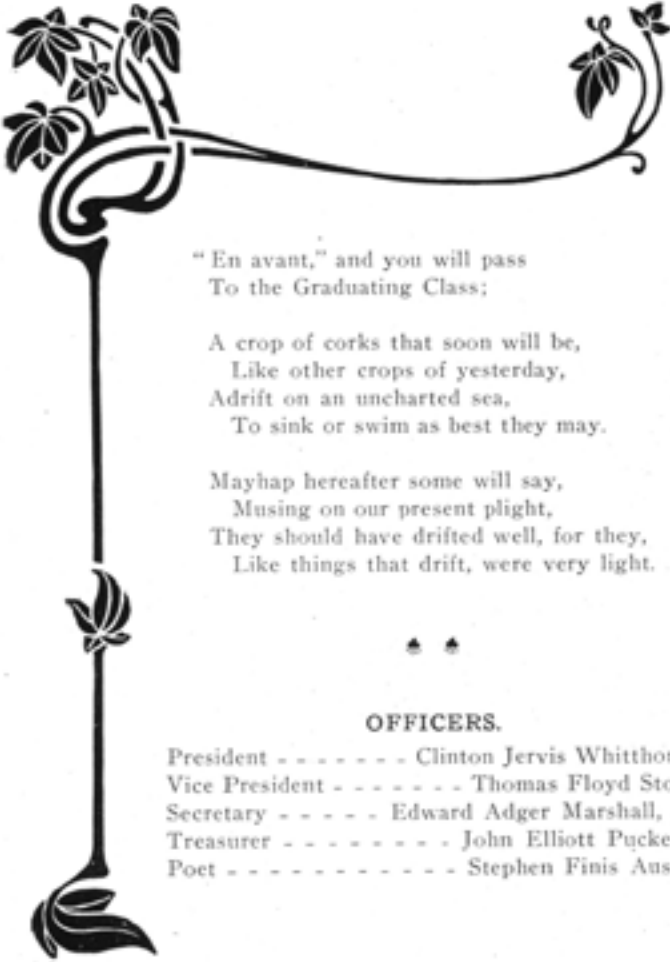

Johannes A. Oertel, D.D.

(Built in 1867, the first of the University buildings. With repeated additions, it has served until this year, when All Saints was first occupied.)

"En avant," and you will pass
To the Graduating Class;

A crop of corks that soon will be,
Like other crops of yesterday,
Adrift on an uncharted sea,
To sink or swim as best they may.

Mayhap hereafter some will say,
Musing on our present plight,
They should have drifted well, for they,
Like things that drift, were very light.

Come fill a stein with good red wine Fresh, spark-ling, cool and clear, Come drink with me, our Thro' all the years of hopes and fears We'll dream of the days of old, And fight for the right song shall be Our Al - ma Mat - er dear, The good old ways of col - lege days We'll call back one by with all our might For the pur-ple and the gold. Come sing a - gain the old re - frain Raise thund'ring to the one, — And o'er the bowl we'll pledge our soul To be her loy - al sons. Al - ma sky — The love of one whose loy - al son We'll be un - til we die.

Mat - er, old Se - wan - ee, A band of loy - al sons are we; We'll be true e - ter - nal.

Cape - Aug. 11, '09

This place gives me the "Blues" - While crossing the Mediterranean Sea, I shot a sand bag at the King of Sardinia, and he thought that Jolley's bomb had arrived before scheduled time; but it was merely my "Go-It!" - By the way, when is a sea not a sea? - When it's a sea! Ha, Ha! Reminds me of Mr. Noll. Love him my love. Joe

Two signs here which read: "American Falls from head to tail." Asked what this meant and received no reply. Love to Dr. Schmitt in Joe's presence.

Egypt - August, 1909 - 1910. This is the temple I helped old Ramses II. to haul out of old rock. Old Ramses and I had a time. I have passed your feet but not a child. I don't like the people here. They are too ugly. If there was a law to beauty here they'd all be dressing someone. Asked the Egyptian if we'd build a nest later. Joe

Weather very changeable here. Yesterday it hot but the breeze in all the wind and drowned the heat. This morning - just as I was about to shoot into a flock of birds a billion ducks, then came a heavy fog. The birds disappeared high and taken with the fog. Joe

Cape Verde Islands - August 7, '09. Merely stopped here to drop a line - my minor coat. Lots of pretty girls here - frank and hearty. Love to Joe. Billy - Joe

Switzerland - Aug. 12, '09. My guide-book says this is where William told Kibella - but it don't say what I did. I got the orange - lemon - I and you from the glass. Joe

England - Aug. 17, 1909. Received a call from my son in Texas - Why name ranch, The D. - Called back - Because that's where the song birds meet. Hope they appreciate the point. Discovered the Internet with Radio. Joe said he thought the distance of the information could be too. Joe

St. Augustine, Fla. - Aug. 17, 1909. This is the oldest house in the United States. It is so old because it is built of elder wood. Joe

Atlantic City - Aug. 18, '09. This is the Old Pier. Isn't it a dear? There are said to be more sharks here than anywhere else. No wonder! Think of the money! Love to Joe. Joe

The Football Season of 1909

THE training season opened last year, as usual, some few days before the University. When the few early comers gathered on Hardee Field, the prospects which greeted their experienced eyes were none too bright. Few of the stars of old had returned, and the new material was light—so light that its lack of power seemed equal to its inexperience.

But with his remarkable gift for doing just the right thing, Harris Cope began to show results within the first week of actual training. The willing men found a sympathetic and enthusiastic coach; and accordingly, every man strove to do more than his share, and kept on striving.

The season opened encouragingly when the undeveloped team overmastered Southwestern Presbyterian by the large score of 64-0. The first trip of a Sewanee team over the Line resulted in a 20-0 victory for Princeton. The small score, and the wonderful letters from the alumni who saw the game, as well as Cope's unflinching enthusiasm, seemed to assure greater success than had at first been dreamed.

A few days' rest, after the hard trip to New Jersey, sufficed to put the 'Varsity once more in good shape; and the next game resulted in a clean victory over the Georgia School of Technology in Atlanta by the score, 15-0. Then in rapid sequence Louisiana State University went down, in a hard-fought and very rough game, with 6 points against Sewanee's 15. At this game President Taft was an interested spectator, and with his whole retinue cheered lustily for no one in particular.

The strong team of the Castle Heights School was supposed to give the hard-worked 'Varsity a good opportunity to "keep on edge," and the game resulted in an easy 38-0.

But somehow, either the men were out of form or else it was only the old, old phantom which has ever prevented Sewanee from overwhelming the Alabama Tech. Both teams were unable to use some of their best men; but with the memory of Auburn's unexpected 6-0 victory in 1908 ever before them, though actuated thereby so very differently, both knew no end. By the narrow margin of one point Sewanee drew the plume of victory from her rival's wing. When the 12-11 result reached the Mountain, every soul in Sewanee went wild. The team returned to find no laurels quite good enough for them; and enthusiastic expectations for the game with Vanderbilt became frequent. The 'Varsity had met the three strongest teams in the South, with the exception of her old-time Thanksgiving Day enemy, and the record of victories was clean-cut. Who would not, under such circumstances, have indulged, at least a little, in rosy dreams for the greatest desideratum of the day?

Ten days of work-outs and comparatively easy practice intervened between Auburn and Thanksgiving Day. Reliance was placed on only a few clever plays, and these were perfected in the minutest detail. The defense was trained until it promised to work without a hitch against the most subtle tactics of the Vanderbilt coach.

On November 24 the coaches escorted the men to Murfreesboro, and kept them, well rested, overnight. On an ideal Thursday morning they made the easy stage to the Nashville Country Club.

At two o'clock these two mighty teams, the greatest in the South, faced each other on Dudley Field. Officials of a high order assured a contest under the most sportsmanlike of conditions. The men needed nothing to spur them to the limits of their power—to fight this rival to the death was bred in both. The sky showed not a cloud, and the bright sunshine was tempered by a fresh and invigorating breeze. But most inspiring of all, to both spectators and players, was the crowd of between eight and ten thousand souls—the greatest assemblage that ever witnessed a Southern football game.

Who that follows Southern football has not heard the oft-told story of that mighty struggle! Echoes of it penetrated the far busy North, where contests equally fierce were even then raging. The Championship of the South hung hoveringly beyond the goal-line. The team which would win must prove its right against the fiery opposition of its peer.

When the game was over and the mighty course, hoarse and weary, rose to depart, Sewanee stood supreme. For the first time since 1899 the Tiger held the palm of Southern Lordship in his paw. Vanderbilt, insolent with victory since 1902, groveled in overwhelming defeat. And with the story of 16-5 there went over the country the news, the glorious news,—“Sewanee is Champion of the S. I. A. A.”

The Baseball Season of 1909

THE Baseball Season of 1909 opened with a long series of disappointments. At first blush the material looked promising. All but two of the old 'Varsity returned, and promising new material was abundant. Then Nemesis began her work. The water-supply of the celestial regions was inexhaustible, and practice became next to fruitless. Then, just before the first series with Vanderbilt, John Myers was thrown out by one of those unscrupulous and ill-advised but very frequent councils of the Faculty.

So it became a "hard-luck story" throughout. The men tried gamely enough, and even in the face of so great obstacles won a fair percentage of their games. But the Team had set its heart upon winning the Championship; and when discouragement and disability resulted in defeat, they found little solace in the victories which came their way.

But still, disheartened as they were, they found the students ever ready to support them; and the record of the season shows two bright spots which illumine all the gloomy doings of the Team of 1909.

First of all, Myers left his mark before he retired. Auburn, flushed with her rare victory in football the previous year, came tauntingly to hunt another scalp. The first day, Sawrie pitched a remarkable game and won it easily, letting down when he had held the Alabama batters safely below the mark reached by the 'Varsity. The next day, with a double-header scheduled, Myers pitched thirteen innings to a 2-1 victory. The side-liners had long been out of the bleachers, and preserved an admirably dignified silence when the game was won.

The defeat of Sewanee's "Hoo-doo" did much to encourage the Team; and forthwith they began preparing for the two series with Vanderbilt.

Sawrie, in the first two games, shut out Sewanee's ancient rivals twice. Then the Tigers played the Commodores in Nashville, and Sawrie administered another blanket score to the claimants for superiority over Sewanee.

So, in spite of all the misfortune, the Team of 1909 has some grateful memories to cherish; and the Mountain has much for which to thank its members.

FACULTAS IN THEOLOGIA.

The slow procession voyaged down the aisle
And took its seat within the chancel rail;
The choir and studes and profs took up a mile,
Trustees and bishops dignified the tail.
The services kept wobbling through the hours,
And ordinary preachers lost their voice,
Till some one showed his mighty mental powers
And asked the congregation to make choice.
St. Luke's most brainy men sat in a row,
And each one thought 'twas he should rise and crow.
But then the weary people rose upright,
And sang a song that put each star to flight;
The tune it mattered little, and the harmony was dim,
But each preacher soon found out it was quite enough for him.

"There's Biscuits, just as dear as a bashful buccaneer,
With a charm and grace of manner that would shame a privateer;
The years are slipping by him, and he shows he's aging fast,
And his framework really seems like it wasn't built to last—
For his beauty's getting wrinkled, and his head is nearly slick;
But his air is very knowing, for his courage still is growing,
And he'll very soon acknowledge—he's a stick.

"And there's — — — —,
With a mane just like a bison,
And a family as large as any one could wish.
On all questions of good hunting
He's the zu-zu baby-bunting,
And he's Oxon rapid-firing when it comes to 'field-posish.'
Just take him in advisement; he's a glossy advertisement
For that wonder-working wizard, Herpicide,
And (pardon the intrusion) he has thrown into confusion
All who even dare to think—'race suicide.'

"But see the cutest rascal, whom they title — — — —,
And let him up and own the place he got his name;
For the first part doesn't matter; it's the last that makes the splatter,
And some one else it was that brought that into fame.
But, blushing like a rose, he'll admit that it's — — — —,
And all the while he'll whistle through his nose."

Then to save their reputation, in their awful consternation,
The Theologs sent word to — — — —;
And he bellowed and he roared, till the diapason snored,
But it mattered very little of the way that he did bawl;
For the bishops giggled onward, nor stopped to think at all.

ECCE QUAM BONUM? WELL, YES!

I dreamed a dream but yesternight,—
'Twas strange, and yet
So clear I've not forgot it quite,
Nor will forget.
I saw our Dean, our gracious Dean,
In joyous mood,
Point up to Breslin Tower, and say:
"Behold how good!"

The dream was changed; I saw a room—
'Twas very queer—
For through the rank tobacco fume
The smell of beer:
I saw our Dean, our gracious Dean,
In joyous mood,
Hold up a brimming stein, and say:
"Behold how good!"

The night was dark, the way was steep,
I nearly broke a leg,
Yet I had sworn that night to keep
A vigil with the keg;
But presently, from out the gloom—
But there at any rate—
The Proctor, on adventure come,
Declared it confiscate.
Next day the Proctor "rode the list,"
Was "sure that he would die,"
And not a soul in Christendom
Could guess the reason why!

The tower rose high among majestic trees,
And overtopped the lofty mountain height,
The local Barbarossa hugged the keys,
And said: "Thank God, the clapper's safe—to-night!"

The Freshman stopped, and murmured open-eyed:
"Say, what was that? And what was that it spoke?"
"That's Mr. Nauts," the older man replied—
"A hoary joker, with a hoary joke!"

Mr. Tyson's favorite quotation is:

"Proud Nimrod first the chase began,
A mighty hunter—and his prey was man."

Man is a carnivorous production, and must have meals; at least one meal a day.—Dr. Piggot.

"B'Gosh! Come over to dinner with me."
The Parson.

Student: "Good morning, Mr. Peak."
Mr. Peak: "Good morning? Oh, yes, good morning."

Perpetual motion in jocundo tenui.—Mr. Nauts.

Ecce Quam Bibitum
Etiam ad libitum!

Dr. Noll: "Mr. Sharpe, where is that Improper Number? I want to have it bound."

Dr. McBryde: "I was teaching a class of young ladies last year—"

Voice from the rear: "Gee, that's what's the matter."

When Dr. Hullihen met one of his Greek classes for the first time, he wrote his name on the blackboard for the audience's information. One of the students, coming in late, looked at the writing for a long time, and then asked: "Can you get it at the Supply Store?"

Who, was Henry(k) (G)ibson? Ask Telfair Hodgson.

Aladdin's lamp has been discovered in St. Luke's.

Dr. Bishop: "Mr. S., give me an illustration of visual aphasia."

Mr. S.: "If one looks at you so that you get too embarrassed to speak, that would be a case in point."

Dr. Bishop: "Yes, sir, a very good illustration."

THE BALLOT BOX.

"The Most Peculiar Prof." went by unanimous choice to the Faculty. Second choice, the rest of the Faculty.

The "Best Dancer," "Biggest Sport," "Biggest Flirt," and the "Sweetest," all went by a large majority to "Duck" Cheves.

Armes cleaned up the "Biggest Eater" by a plurality of several thousand.

There was a vast difference of opinion as to who is the handsomest student. The field is led by "Lemon" White, with Miller and Scruggs tied for second place.

Turner was voted, with slight opposition, to be both the Cheekiest and Most Conceited student.

The "Bachelor of Ugliness" was a tie between John Myers and Hector Holden, with Sike Williams and Faulkinberry in second and third places.

ECCE HOBO!

Tho' this our school, in modern ways,
Propriety exhorts,
I fain would raise a hymn of praise
To worthy Mr. Nauts;
Him, judging by his best deserts,
Whose cognomen should be
"The Leader of the Animal
In perpetuity!"

The Senior's fate the Junior warns:—
At every social route
'Tis his delight to seize the horns
And lead the Bull about!
O, shun his close vicinity
And all of his resorts—
This Doctor of Bovinity—
The gusty Mr. Nauts!

The University of the South

SEWANEE, TENNESSEE

Organized 1857

Opened 1868

Received Charter from the State of Tennessee 1858

Under the joint control of nineteen Southern Dioceses.

Located on a domain of about 10,000 acres, on a plateau of the Cumberland Mountains, in a region world-famous for its salubrious climate and for the beauty of its natural scenery.

The University is equipped to confer the following degrees in course: B.A., M.A., B.C.E., C.E., G.D., B.D.

While Sewanee's claim to stand for training in classical and literary culture is justified by the large number of alumni who have attained to prominence in literature, journalism, and the learned professions, many are successful in business and many others have attained to high positions in the affairs of the State and Nation.

To the ten permanent stone buildings on the University domain will shortly be added a Science Hall, for which Mr. Carnegie has given $60,000, and which, when completed and properly equipped, will contribute to the broader growth of the University.

The scholastic year 1910-1911 begins September 22.
